It's what processes the user's requests, uploads data into the system, and sends it off to the rest of the world. Web pages take longer to load, and it can be frustrating to use when you need it to just work. While Lightroom also has issues with just how slow the program is, don't expect to see equally spectacular performance from it the way you do from Photoshop. The problem is that Lightroom is designed to be extremely extensible. If you want to add something to the program, it will not affect performance at all. This is an excellent feature in theory. Now you can create a snapshot of your document and invite a reviewer to comment on it. Comments show up in real time in a panel within Photoshop where you can see and address them. You can continue to update the PSD with reviewers seeing those updates when the file is refreshed or reopened.
