For the virtual folder feature, we mainly use it to organize large photo libraries, to navigate them, or to be able to quickly share photo info with family and friends. We found Lightroom to be the most versatile one. The added ability to navigate folders from Lightroom is pretty worthwhile in a 3D work environment. One of the suggested changes in Lightroom 5 is to move the Enhance menu to one button. The typical function is "Enhance" plus a bunch of shortcuts. You can only access the "Enhance" menu if you open the image, not by selecting "Enhance" from the "Open with" menu. The other one is the new Enhance menu by Jeff Schewe. There is actually a lot of news, every nice feature in Lightroom 5. For example, it provides a two-step way of decreasing image noise, with one step that uses the Global Kit, applied globally to a specific image, and the other step, that is built in to the image editing controls. That step also applies to the other noise reduction options. Also, Michael Day's quick noise removal works for RAW files. There's also a new pre-selection Warp function that features 3D animation, skin retouching, and straightening. Frankly, I'm not really impressed with presets like "High Key" or "Low Key". They are supposed to be used for adjustment purposes, but they do nothing for me when it comes to tonal differences. Plus, only one color area is used instead of all areas of the image. Of course, it works, but I don't say I rely on it for my everyday editing. In addition to that, there is a new Preset Manager with four new Presets to choose from. They range from Tool Presets since the title is not a typical image editing preset. There is also a Dare Preset, a Lens Correction Preset, a Lens Correction Adjustment Preset and a Tone adjustment Preset. It's going to be great to have a new Camera RAW Level 02 Raw image editor available in Lightroom.

It's done by changing the preference, which can be found in the Window menu. Then click on the "Scale in Loose Fit" option. Huge predictions are set for the ceremony that begs from Best Picture to Actress in a Leading Role, from Best Director to Best Scenic Design and But last year in the end, the film industry handed out the award for Best Picture to ' mobile phones '. How can that be? I'm still not taking this prediction too seriously. Well, we do know that American Beauty, The Departed, The Artist, Crash, The Grand Budapest Hotel, The King's Speech, The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King, Skyfall, Slumdog Millionaire, The Social Network, The Thin Red Line, Toy Story 3, True Grit, Up, and Walk the Line broke the records as the most nominated films in a single year, but it's not all that easy to predict Oscars.
